THE NEW YORK fashion writer, Clara Belle, says that "during the coming season ladies will wear nothing but longitudinally striped hose." Thanks for the warning, Clara. Now let us know when the coming season will begin so we may go into eclosion while the "too awfully too" show is going on.

No section of the country has been more honestly sincere in genuine sympathy for the President and expressions of indignation and terror at the deed which so nearly deprived the President of his life than the south. The southern papers have clearly demonstrated in this gloomy period that with them there is no longer the thought of a divided country. The New Orleans Picayune most happily expresses what the southern sentiment has been and is in regard to the crime:

The hand that would strike the assassin's blow at the chief magistrate of this republic commits the highest crime against his race that could be conceived. Every citizen of these United States, whether he voted for Mr. Garfield or not, will feel that the miserable creature who sought the President's life has committed a wrong for which no known punishment is adequate. But the death of a President from any cause does not affect the national credit. The real strength of the republic lies in the fealty of its citizens, and their devotion to the institutions which they inherited, a united and free people in possession of a splendid country, and determined upon achieving a great destiny.

THE ATTEMPT to kill President Garfield has revived the account of the mad effort to shoot President Jackson, on January 30th, 1835. Very few persons remember the occurrence, and it made comparatively little sensation at the time, though this was due largely to the slow methods in existence for distributing the news. In many parts of the country knowledge of the event was not obtained for weeks after the assault. On the day mentioned the two houses of Congress convened for the obsequies of Representative W. R. Davis, of South Carolina, then lately deceased. The President and members of the cabinet were in attendance:

After a discourse by the Chaplain of the House a funeral procession was formed, in which the President walked arm in arm with the secretary of the treasury, Levi Woodbury. The procession left the hall of the House of Representatives and was passing through the rotunda, on the way to the eastern portico, when Lawrence, as he perceived the President approach, stepped forward from the crowd, advanced to within a few feet of him, drew a pistol, aimed it at the President, and pulled the trigger. The cap missed fire. Secretary Woodbury and others sprang to arrest him; he, however, had time to draw another pistol, but this second attempt to shoot was equally unsuccessful. He was thrown down, disarmed, and secured. In taking him he stood so near the President that the latter instinctively started forward to strike the pistol aside with his cane; so that, had not the caps failed, there is every probability that a dangerous, probably a fatal, wound would have been given. The trial of Lawrence was postponed until April, apparently to allow time for searching his antecedents and investigating his mental condition. Both the evidence and Lawrence's demeanor in the court-room satisfied the public at the time that the shooting was the act of a lunatic. He had for some time believed himself to be King of the United States and Jackson to be an intruder and usurper. In the court-room his behavior was so wild and disorderly that his counsel begged that he might be removed and the trial proceed without him. No wonder: for when the district attorney commenced speaking, Lawrence started up wildly exclaiming: "What means this personal indignity? Is it decreed that I am to be brought here? And for what? I desire to know if I, who claim the crown of the United States, likewise the crown of Great Britain, and who am superior to this court, am to be treated thus." And the proceedings were frequently broken by like interruptions. As the jury agreed with the medical man that he was an irresponsible monomaniac, he was committed to an asylum.

ACCIDENTAL PRESIDENTS.

The Boston Herald, one of the most liberal, as it is one of the ablest of New England journals says:

It is, perhaps, too much to say that no political convention in this country will again dare to nominate a man for Vice President whom it would not be willing to name as President. The experience of the past would seem to have furnished ample warning to the body that nominated Chester A. Arthur; and yet, in a gush of weak generosity and brazen enthusiasm, the men who controlled the Chicago convention invited and acquiesced in what we characterized at the time as a most astonishing piece of criminal folly. If the spectacle which the Vice-President has made of himself at Albany has not sufficiently informed the republican party of the nature and extent of that blunder, the tenor of public opinion for the past two dreadful days must have completed their enlightenment. The death of President Garfield, deeply as he would have been mourned, has seemed to be almost subordinated, as a national grief, to the accession of General Arthur.

This is, perhaps, placing the matter a little too plainly, and with too much frankness. Arthur is not the wisby-washy man that he might be inferred to be from the above, nor is he a bad man. At the same time he is not the person that anyone would like to see at the head of the nation. He has neither the capacity nor dignity for a President whom the masses would look up to and respect as they want to. It, unfortunately, he had succeeded to the office, he would necessarily have made a fair average President. The people would have forced him to this, by compelling him to accept the advice of wise men in managing the affairs of the nation. The peculiar circumstances under which President Garfield would have died, had Garfield's shot proven fatal, would rather have changed Arthur as a man, than revolutionized the Administration, in open opposition to which the Vice President is known to be.

Once before the assassination of the President placed a man at the head of the nation whose principles and politics were the direct opposite of those of his predecessor. Andrew Johnson was a life-long, consistent and conscientious democrat. He was besides, a brave, fearless man, and as Mr. Lincoln's assassination could in no way be remotely attributed to or reflect upon him, he was not under even the shadow of an obligation to pursue the policy of Lincoln; whereas Arthur had been making war upon Garfield, and the would-be assassin (without the slightest encouragement, all must admit) boasted that he did the deed for the benefit of the Vice-President. The boast, unwarranted and cruel as it was, made it impossible for Arthur to act according to his own policy in opposition to that of him whom he succeeded. Johnson was an independent, untied president, and he acted according to his own ideas, politically and otherwise, with what trouble and excitement we all know.

Here are two instances within a generation that should prove valuable lessons to political parties. No man whom the party would not like to see president should be nominated for vice-president. Very few republicans would feel honored with Arthur in the Executive Mansion. Would any democrat have felt honored had Bill English, the party's late candidate for vice-president, been made president?

THE SPECIALIST, "Dr." L. R. Williams, who had headquarters in this city some years ago, but who before that time and since gullied the unwary and preyed upon the innocent of Chicago, is in pretty serious trouble in the Garden City. He is awaiting trial on two charges, one of rape and the other attempted abortion. The complainant is a colored girl, who went to him for help out of the "interesting condition" in which she unfortunately found herself. The law officers of Chicago have been making it lively for some of the fellows of the Williams stripe.

AMONG THE other dangers and evils which are the result of cigarette-smoking, according to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, are indigestion, irritable throats and impaired vision, especially in younger boys. Notwithstanding the general bad effects of the habit, the manufacture of cigarettes is growing enormously. Virginia alone makes annually over 50,000,000.

Unhealthy or inactive kidneys cause gravel, Bright's disease, rheumatism, and a host of other serious and fatal diseases, which can be prevented with Hop Bitters, if taken in time.

A CARD.

Certain persons presuming to speak for "The Saloon Keepers' Union" (7) are surreptitiously accusing me of having done some "deed without a name," which in their estimation has assumed terrible proportions. When, how, and where, and of what it consists, no one knows, at least it so appears, as none of them is able to tell.

Taking the ground that any one who knows anything can tell something about it, I therefore extend an invitation to the Union or any of its friends to "tell it all." If they can show anything dishonorable in my course, I sincerely beg of them that they will not spare my feelings.

Should the papers hesitate to print such statements as you may desire to make, please send your manuscript to me over your own signatures, and I will have it published at regular advertising rates. Now, let me hear from you, or by your silence give confirmation to what is generally conceded, that you have nothing to say. Start your photograph if there is anything in it. I'll stay with you.

Respectfully,

HAIR RENEWER

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff, and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing nothing has been found so effective, or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE,

For the Whiskers.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade, to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectively produces a permanent color which will neither rub nor wash off.
